Roscoe and Beach also visited her. Kate Stoddard called several times on Lucette to learn whether Goodrich visited her, and manifested jealousy. Roscoe was also jealous, and threatened to kill Goodrich. One night Lucette and Beach went to Goodrich's house and, entering with false keys, hid in a closet. Kate Stoddard and Goodrich entered soon afterward and quarreled for some time. Then Lucette heard a shot and three or four more in succession. She burst from the closet and saw Roscoe, pistol in hand, leaning over Goodrich, and Kate washing blood from his forehead. Roscoe threatened to shoot Lucette, but let her off on she swearing secrecy. NEVADA.

RENO, Oct. 31.—The total number of buildings burned is 99, principally business houses. Loss, fully $150,000; very little insurance—probably $15,000 or $20,000 will cover the amount. Property to-day has changed hands in the burnt district for more money than was asked for it with the buildings before the fire. The merchants now propose building fireproof stores as soon as material can be obtained. Several brick and stone buildings have been purchased at Washoe City, taken down, moved here and rebuilt.

VIRGINIA CITY, Oct. 31.—The ninth anniversary of the admission of Nevada into the Union was celebrated in this city and Gold Hill to-day, with great pomp by the Society of Pacific Coast Pioneers and Veterans of the Mexican War. At a depth of 400 feet a ledge was struck with a pay streak of four feet in width, assays from which gave results of from $1,000 to $3,500 per ton. Mr. Cassett, the Superintendent, arrived in town to-night en route to San Francisco. He reports the vein to have increased in width to nine feet, without any signs of a wall, and yet is steadily increasing in richness. The mine is open to public inspection. No secrecy has been observed. The strike is undoubtedly the richest ever made in Eastern Nevada.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

[From the Salem Mercury of Oct. 30.]

The Board of Equalization after a protracted session, is now bringing its labors to a close.

It has been delayed, first, by the non-receipt of the rolls from the various counties, which have come slowly dribbling in, the last two or three only arriving last week.

Then a large amount of correction was necessary before the work of equalization could commence on many of the assessment rolls; only the counties of Clatsop, Columbia, Douglas, Jackson, Josephine, Lane, Marion, Multnomah, Tillamook, Washington and Yamhill, escaping a preliminary overhauling.

The apparent increase in property, shown by the rolls returned this year, over last, is $14,600,000. The process of equalization by the State Board raises these figures.

Great discrepancies in the estimated value of lands and stock by the various Assessors is apparent. This is one of the duties of the State Board to equalize, by the addition or deduction of a percentage sufficient to make the result uniform, a work now, we are informed, nearly completed, and which we hope to lay before our readers in our next issue. The property of corporations has also been equalized.

Owing to the improved form of assessment roll adopted by the State Board, the various kinds of personal property and real estate, for the first time, appear separately, so that the forthcoming tables will contain a detailed showing of the property of the State.

N. P. R. R. LANDS.

The following letter to the Secretary of the S. & W. W. R. R. has been handed to the Seattle Dispatch for publication. It explains itself

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Dear Sir—Referring to your letter of August 20 last, transmitting a series of resolutions adopted by the citizens of Seattle, W. T., July 19 last, relative to the withdrawal of lands for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company north of Tacoma, also your recent letter of 16th ult., I have to state that, said Company having since filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a map of the general route of their branch line from Tacoma across the Cascade Mountains to a connection with their main line near Lake Pend d'Oreille, instructions were yesterday issued to the district land officers at Olympia, W.T., to withdraw the lands for forty miles on each side of said branch line, and to restore to pre-emption and homestead entry all other lands north of Tacoma now withdrawn on account of the main line of said road.

Very respectfully,
WILLIS DRUMMOND, Com'r.

LETTER FROM OLYMPIA.

OLYMPIA, Oct. 30, 1870.

DEAR NOTES,

Last night the M. E. Church was crowded to excess to witness an exhibition given by mutes from the Oregon Mute School in Salem, who were brought here by Rev. Mr. Knight, at the request of the Hon. N. T. Caton, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the purpose of showing to the Legislature the importance of either establishing a mute school in this Territory, or granting appropriations necessary to have our mutes educated in Oregon but unfortunately Mr. Caton was suddenly called away on business, upon which the Legislature took a recess until Monday next, thus throwing an obstacle in the way of legislation on this most important subject. At the hour announced a large audience, composed of Gov. Ferry, Secretary Struve, Legislators and the most respectable people in the city, filled the church, and soon after Mr. Knight appeared with his pupils, consisting of one mute teacher (Prof. Smith,) and five mutes.

Mr. Knight commenced the entertainment by impressing his audience with two facts: first, that he was not there as the advocate of the claims of the Oregon Mute School, and, second, that he was not traveling nor giving entertainments for the sake of making money as a show. The reverend gentleman stated that at present the charge for educating pupils outside of Oregon is $200 a year, the State of Oregon appropriating about $4,500 a year in coin for the purpose of keeping up the school in their State, and as there are now three pupils from this Territory (including one leaving town with him to-day,) he would earnestly recommend the Legislature, on the part of the Territory, to appropriate a sum sufficient to meet the wants of those unable to send their children to such an institution. The school in Oregon now contains twenty-seven pupils, and is under the superintendence of a speaking teacher (Mr Knight,) a mute teacher (Prof. Smith,) a matron and monitor. The school opens at 9 A. M., and continues till 3 P. M., with an intermission of one hour. A sewing lesson then takes place for one hour, during which time the boys are employed in the business of seating cane-bottomed chairs and other light work. The evenings are generally closed by a short school session and pleasant reading. The principal difficulty to be met with in conducting a mute school is the laying of a foundation. It takes from three to five years to lay the same foundation in the mind of a mute child as it does that of a child three years old having all its senses. Therefore patience is a virtue in that school, I should say.

The first pupil introduced was Miss Naomi McCarver, daughter of General McCarver of Tacoma, a bright and intelligent girl of about ten years, but having only been in the Institute about six weeks, of course her proficiency (although very good indeed), yet was not anything more than could be expected under the circumstances. The next was Simeon Eaton, a smart, bright-eyed little fellow of nine years, who was remarkably apt and exceedingly cunning in all its acts. He has been only one year in school, and knows more than most of our boys know after several years' schooling. His pantomimes of "trout-fishing," "stirring up bees" and "milking cows" were capital, and created considerable amusement among the young folks. Mr. John H. Le Rue, monitor of the boys' department, aged twenty-one years, was next introduced, and gave as pantomime "Christ stilling the tempest," with very good effect.

The Misses Mary Watkins and Dora Billings being introduced, showed their proficiency in composition, making sentences on words given them by the audience, neatly written, combined with good spelling and grammar.

Mr. Le Rue composed the following sentence on the word "love": "An old bachelor must love an old maid, because there are plenty of old maids in the world," which caused considerable laughter.

The "vain woman and the dandy" were next personated by Miss Billings and Mr. Le Rue, from which it was evident that they must have seen the characters personified some time during their lives. The pantomime of "making love" by Mr. Le Rue and Miss Watkins were all very good, and applauded highly. The principal feature of the exhibition was the drum telegraph—Prof. Smith taking a snare drum and telegraphing words given him by the audience. Imagine the word "Mississippi," which was received by Mr. Le Rue and written on the blackboard correctly each time. This is done by jarring the body of the mute, which tells him the letter, and in this way they can become skillful operators. Miss Watkins' recitation of a poem by gesticulation was admirable, and if some of our young ladies could do as well, and perform as gracefully, it would be greatly to their credit.

After the recitation of "Sheridan's Ride," by Prof. Smith, the exhibition was closed by all the pupils reciting the "Lord's Prayer" by signs, and the large audience dispersed, well pleased with the entertainment, and hoping for another one to-night; but as Mr. Knight has promised to give an exhibition in Portland to-morrow evening, it is his intention to leave this town to-day and lay over at Tenino till to-morrow.

VIVIAN.

With his troupe, has been here, and, I regret to say, did not meet with the success he deserves, having but a small house last night, although his audience on Tuesday evening was a good one. But Mr. Vivian is different from other professionals in his line in one respect, and that is, he gives a full programme whether the house be full or not, and in this he makes many friends, especially in small towns. The performance each evening was well worth the money, and if he returns this way, I hope he will meet with more success than he has met with on his down trip. He started for Seattle to-day

J. W. L.

LEGISLATIVE.

Some of the members are still in town others have visited their homes, and still others have gone to Portland to see the sights after which they will feel better able to legislate on the welfare of the Territory, which should be (but unfortunately is not) paramount to every other object. The Legislature, this time, is about three-fourths Democratic, and thus far have it all their own way, the result of their legislation, whether for better or worse, probably becoming apparent in the course of a year or two, or perhaps less, from this time.

May they never have cause to regret what has been done by them during their session, is the sincere wish of their constituents.

OVERLAND JOURNEY TO SAN FRANCISCO.

SECOND LETTER.

[From a Lady Resident of Portland.]

Near the foot of the Siskiyou Mountains we enter the State of California. For many miles we get fine views of Mount Shasta, which stands up grandly in its snowy purity against the azure, and is itself worth coming far to see. On the route we have nearer views of this than we have of any of our own snow mountains from Portland, and perhaps it is on that account that its huge skeleton below the snow line seemed very sharp and rocky. But it is a sublime sight, and we would by no means detract from its well deserved reputation for grandeur. Yet of Adams and Helens and Hood are not so high, they are more appreciated by Oregonians, perhaps because they appropriate them, and value them as we do familiar friends, without pausing to consider whether they are really more attractive.

At Jacksonville a few Chinamen were added to our company. We think highly of "John's" usefulness, and of his politeness, too, where he is well treated and his suspicions of imposition are not aroused. These poor fellows had evidently, by past experience, learned the lessons of distrust, and their apprehensions on this score were painful to see. An unprejudiced observer might find it difficult to decide in some of the cases to which we refer, whether the persecutor or the persecuted was the barbarian.

At Yreka we made our first change of stages. There we entered upon a route different from that traveled a few years before. Then we crossed Scott and Trinity mountains at heights which dwarfed to saplings the tallest pines in the depths below. And in the valleys of the same name we encountered severe cold in early autumn. This entire region, embracing a vast circuit, is elevated several thousand feet above sea level. The road, after leaving the plain through which the Klamath river flows, passes over a rough and mountainous region, with boulders scattered thickly about, the pine and fir trees

Our farmer pronounced the land very poor. It was hard riding, for the road seemed paved with huge boulders.

On reaching the Sacramento river, the woods grew thicker and the rocks more prominent. Cliffs and precipices appear. The river flows darkly through irregular canyons, at great depths, to which the road occasionally descends. These canyons seemed, as we wound in and out, like an interminable labyrinth. And in some places there were rocky roadways over which our rapid progress caused frequent changes of position incompatible with patience or dignity. The river is tortuous and obstructed by rocks and debris, but pursues its way over many a bright cascade and through many a glassy pool, and its silvery glitter far below suggests bright and pleasant associations.

THE PONDEROUS WAGON TRAINS.

A novel feature of this region, seen a most inconvenient and expensive mode of transportation. The wagon itself is as large as a cottage, and so high and of such cavernous depth as to appear capable of containing a ship's cargo. The wheels upon which it is poised are each as large as a windmill, and the wide iron bands that encircle them are of untold strength. Sometimes drawn by horses, but more frequently by mules, their progress is very slow. The drivers need great patience and an unlimited store of pleasant thoughts to bear them company on their long journeys.

Having descended to the plain, miles of almost level and very good road lay before us, over which we made rapid advance. The whole country is parched as a desert. The plain of the Sacramento river, which stretches to Red Bluff and southward, exhibits an almost extinguished vegetation. The lovely pines are drooping, and desert shrubs are dried up. A few favored spots below the average level of the gravel plains are blest with moisture, and here the rancher has driven his stakes and spread his gaunt herd abroad.

At Redding, where the railroad awaited us, we were quite willing to change to a more agreeable mode of conveyance.

WHEN THE DAY BROKE,

Numerous towns passed in review before us. The scenery was inspiring. The Sacramento valley resembles in appearance the valley of the Willamet. Each is bounded east and west by mountain ranges. But the Wallamet valley, though not so wide, is far more fertile and beautiful. As the sun rose over the Sierra Nevadas, fringing them with dazzling light and pouring a flood of radiance upon the Coast Ranges, we gazed, though with eyes made weary by night travel, upon a scene of surpassing grandeur. But as the sun mounted the heavens, the heat became fervid, and we had enough during the day to remind us of the fearful temperature which prevails in this valley.

Some of these towns were centers of trade in mining days. Then followed lethargy and decline. But the railroad has brought permanent prosperity. Chico, Marysville and Sacramento are centers of agricultural supply and exchange. And the entire route bears evidence of increasing growth.

At Sacramento we were transferred to the Overland train, composed of eight or ten cars loaded with passengers. The sight of them gave us a few heart throbs. They reminded us of sights and scenes on the Atlantic side which were once very familiar.

Musing on the prospect of such sights in Oregon, and the change which a direct railroad connection with the Eastern States would introduce into ours, we were swiftly conveyed to Oakland, and across the magnificent bay to San Francisco.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The Dungeness fog whistle will be ready by the 1st of next month.

The Dunsmuir Diggle Coal Company, Departure Bay, have received a contract from Mr. Richard, San Francisco, for 24,000 tons of coal.

Several ships are due at the Inlet to load cargoes. Business is again brisk. The following vessels will load at the Hastings mill: Nation's Hope, Wildwood and another.

The Colonist estimates that there are now at least 30,414 head of beef cattle in the Province and still the imports from Washington Territory continue to supply the Victoria market.

The Standard says: "The liquor traffic amongst the Indians of the west coast prevails to an alarming extent. The natives are supplied with all they want, and retail and distribute it among their friends, so that it is dangerous to visit them for purposes of trade."

It is stated that three hundred men are all that will be required for the Volunteer Militia of the Province, and to be raised as follows: Victoria, 100 men, rifles; Nanaimo, 30 men, do; New Westminster and Burrard Inlet, 80 or 100 men, artillery; upper country, 50 or 75 men, cavalry.

Three men arrived at Victoria a few days since from Barclay Sound, who report the discovery of gold bearing ground about twelve miles up the Sound. They have brought down specimens of the gold, which prove to be rich and coarse, and say that they have obtained very favorable prospects, and look forward to taking out good pay next spring, when they intend to return. The ground resembles Leech river, but is deeper. More bars also exist than in the river, which was the excitement of 1864.

The school at Hillsboro commenced on Monday, with an attendance of sixty-five scholars, which has increased to eighty at the present writing. There is not an empty house in town, and every family has been offered from three to five children to board. Good schools in every District is the aim of the people of Washington county.

The Grangers will meet at Lafayette, Saturday, Nov. 8th, at 1 o'clock.

About 100,000 bushels of wheat have been stored at Dayton since the the first of August.

We learn that Col. J. W. Nesmith, Congressman elect, will leave for Washington next Tuesday.

Cornelius has more new babies than any other town in Oregon, considering the number of inhabitants.

The Haun bridge, between Lafayette and St. Joe, is in a very poor condition—in fact, it is hardly safe to drive across it.

Col. Saxe has ordered to this State forty head of English and Kentucky bred Cotswold sheep. They will arrive in two or three weeks.

The fine steamer of the W. R. T. Company, the Beaver, is making regular trips on the Yamhill river, and comes down well filled each trip.

The Sunday-school at Lafayette, under the excellent supervision of Mrs. Burbank, is rapidly filling up. It now numbers some eighty scholars.

Farmers of Yamhill county have about all of their fall wheat sown already. There has been a very large amount of wheat sown—some say about four times as much as usually.

The Oregon City Woolen Mills are in operation day and night, with a full force of operatives, but we are informed that the company are unable to meet the demand for their goods.

The Cornelius Academy is completed and school will be opened in a few weeks. This building presents a fine appearance, and does credit to the energy and enterprise of the citizens.

Hon. Daniel Clarke, who has been absent for some weeks in California, attending the meeting of the delegates of the Pacific Coast Granges, returned to Salem by the evening train last Tuesday.

During the week two convicts were pardoned from the penitentiary. One was a man named Warren, sentenced from Jackson county for larceny. The other was a half-breed, sentenced for killing an Indian.

A few days since, as some young men were running horses, John Hulery, a young man living at Dayton, was thrown from his horse, and in some way the horse stepped upon one of his feet, mashing it so that amputation was necessary.

Tom Ross, who was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail at the last term of Circuit Court in Washington county, for appropriating a pair of blankets to his own use, made his escape last week. It seems that while at supper the jailer undertook to explain to a friend the theory of jail-keeping, and while he was thus engaged the prisoner got up and walked off.

A gentleman of Eastern Oregon, writing to the Advocate concerning the Union County Fair, speaks highly of the blooded stock on the grounds, and the articles in the Pavilion, but adds with much show of reason: "Two objections only suggested itself to my mind. First, the little encouragement given in the premiums to mechanics, and, second, the unreasonable prominence given to mere speed in horses. This latter is not only an error, but a certain destruction to fairs. As in this case, it may simply show that a spotted Cayuse is the best stock in the country, because he outruns other horses that is, if the speed of the runners is the test of the quality in the horse. One thing specially commends this Agricultural Association: no liquor is allowed on the grounds. Probably there was not a drunken man at the fair. A more intelligent and respectable gathering would be impossible to find anywhere. Union county thus demonstrates her capacity to be equal to any other equal area in the State of Oregon."

THE TERRITORIES.

Deep Creek Valley, Montana, is swarming with buffalo.

Montana produces but half a crop of all kinds of grain this year.

The Colorado people thank God that Gov. Evans hasn't got a special tax on the pure air of that Territory. He has everything else taxed.

The Salt Lake Herald is pleased to know that for once the papers of that city agree on one point, viz: that Utah ought to have a Branch Mint.

The Beaver Enterprise has woodbined. After disposing of the material of the office to a Mormon, the publishers started for Arizona to try their fortunes in that Territory.

Two runaway boys from Elmira, New York, passed through Ogden a few days ago. They walked 500 miles, stole an occasional ride on the cars, fared sumptuously upon carrion, when nothing better offered, and blacked boots for spare change.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company claim 2,688,000 acres of land in Washington Territory and Oregon, and 5,120,000 in Dakota. They also claim now to have 558 miles of road built, of which 1053 miles are in Washington Territory, 200 miles in Dakota and the remainder in Minnesota.

The Corinne Reporter man offers the man or woman who will exhibit at that office five pounds of home-made butter, which three disinterested parties unhesitatingly pronounce a number one article, a year's subscription to the Reporter. He wants it for his hair, and he thinks five pounds will last him till spring.

The Boise City Statesman says: "The Government property at the garrison, sold on Thursday last brought good prices. Hay that cost $20 a ton brought $45. Blankets, blouses, overcoats, and other clothing, considerably damaged by moths, brought more than first cost. The horses and mules were inferior, and of course sold low, but brought all they were worth.

The Advocate's correspondent, in speaking of Chehalis valley, W. T., says: "I would say to such as are on the lookout for homes, that there is a large amount of good farming land in this region. Independence creek No. 1, on the south side of Chehalis river, has a rich valley twenty-five miles long and one mile wide, and but two claims taken. Independence creek No. 2 has a fine valley seven miles long and one wide, with a very extensive quarry of soft stone that must be valuable some time. Cedar creek, on the north side of the river, with two claims taken. These valleys are covered with vine maple, which is easy to be removed, and hence from one to two hundred homes can be made readily. To find these valleys one will need a guide, as they do not lay on the present thoroughfares.

A letter from Chehalis reservation to the Advocate says the Indians on this reservation are doing well, many of whom are farming to a good advantage. Charley Walker, one of the sub-chiefs, raised this year 68 bushels of wheat, and 130 of oats; had a good garden, put up ten tons of hay, has two wagons and five horses. Many others are doing as well or better than he. Some have taken claims and are improving them just as white men.

"Kanaka Joe," the San Juan murderer, is now at Olympia, and the Courier reporter thus describes him: "He is a very young man—almost a boy—quite heavy set, with broad shoulders, and a strong frame. He looks more like a Northern Indian than a Kanaka; possessing all their characteristics in his physique; strongly built; straight, coarse, black hair, combed perfectly smooth behind his ears; sharp, black eyes; high cheek bones; rather a large mouth, with thick lips; a straight nose, and in fact a perfect 'Stickeen.' His looks would indicate him to be anything but a murderer. He has become quite blase of from his long confinement in prison, and looks much whiter than an Indian. He was dressed in a neat suit of clothes, and wore upon his head a soldier's cap." In an interview, Joe acknowledged that he killed Capt. Dwyer, but said two Indians, who are living at Victoria, shot Mrs. Dwyer, and forced him to kill the Captain. Joe also confesses to the murder of a Mr. Fuller some two years since, and says that he was forced to do so by Northern Indians."

Arrest of Counterfeiters.

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—A dispatch from Goldsborough, North Carolina, states that a most important capture of counterfeiters was effected yesterday by the United States Marshal. The band consisted of William Black, John Moore, Washington Broadley, and William Bryant. Black is supposed to be the leader of the gang, which has been known as "Blacks" among those who have had any dealings with them. He is a resident of Madison, Rockingham county, and is fully eighty years of age. His estimated wealth is about $150,000, which he is supposed to have acquired through his manipulation of the "queer." He owns most of the town in which he resided before his arrest, and probably dealt in the illicit commodity the greater portion of his lifetime. It is said that he never failed to redeem any counterfeit which his victims returned to him, paying them in genuine currency, and when arrested he expressed entire ignorance of the charges against him. Moore is from a place called Mooreville, Iredell county. He is ostensibly a merchant, and is reputed to be worth about $30,000. He is sixty years of age. Broadley is from Sheppard's Cross Roads, Iredell county, and is also a merchant, worth about the same amount. Charges of selling "queer" and passing counterfeit coin have been entered against these men, and they were taken to Statesville for examination by the United States Commissioner. Bryant, who was arrested upon the same charge, is a negro, and is from Charlotte, Mecklenburg county. He was bailed in the sum of $5,000. Jas. Baker who escaped on the 22nd, passed a counterfeit $5 bill upon a man named Burns, and was shortly after recaptured. He has had this last offense, and was committed in default of bail. These arrests have created great excitement throughout the State, and the people are gratified that the extensive operations practiced upon them are in a fair way of being rooted out.

THE END OF IT ALL.

So this is the end of it all—of the love fondly deem'd
Would prove a sweet fruition of the perfect thing it seem'd?

Only a walk in the starlight—a stroll by the moonlit river—
An angry word—a low "Good-night," that meant "Good-bye forever."

"Good-night!" Your pale lips echoed the cold words of thy own
A chilling clasp of your fingers, and I stood there alone—

Alone by the trysting willow—alone with my broken dream—
Alone with the ghost of dead love, in the moonlight's pallid gleam

Only a word; but 'twas spoken in a moment of jealous pain—
A word that ended love's romance, and left on its mem'ry a stain.

Only a walk in the silence—a stroll by the sleeping river—
An angry word—a low "Good night" but it meant "Good-bye forever."

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV 1, 1873

A FEW FACTS

It has always been a kind of tradition among Oregon newspaper men that what the present editor of the Bulletin hasn't cheek enough to do isn't worth doing; that what he isn't unscrupulous enough to attempt may as well be left undone. In the light of this reputation or common [illegible], the article in yesterday's Bulletin, in which the editor-in-chief of that sheet takes to himself all credit for the convic[illegible]n of Robert Bruce, the repeater, is by no means strange. Hear this cheeky son of Hudibras: "At last, we have compelled the Prosecuting Attorney to a sense of his duty, reluctantly performed as it was!" And, again:

Still, we rejoice that the Bulletin has been the means of compelling the Prosecuting Attorney to such performance of his official duty as to convict the accused despite his understand efforts to offset his own prosecution by ringing in as one of counsel for the defense a [illegible]n who was pledged to the other side

It is very well understood by this community that the OREGONIAN has interested itself in the exposure of the crimes by which Multnomah county was carried for Elisha Smith; that it first laid bare the infamous "card" trick, and published the names of the members of the Custom House ring who officiated as bribers on election day. It is equally well known that the Bulletin has shielded and defended the briber and the bribed, whenever they [illegible]rved. By a kind of journalistic [illegible]lism of which no decent [illegible] would be guilty, it has prostituted its columns to the defense of these political villains, simply because they belong to the ring, of which it is head, and has persistently assailed with the most [illegible] kind of personal abuse, those officers of the law who were endeavoring to [illegible] its pet gang of criminals to justice. [illegible]ad Prosecuting Attorney has been [illegible] with bitter malice. It has [illegible]him for attempting, in the [illegible], to convict several of the [illegible] who were bought by certain [illegible] who infest the Federal [illegible]. Mr. Durham did his duty, and caused the Grand Jury to find Franklin and his fellow-thieves guilty. But what did Mulkey, and Wetherell, and DuBois, and [illegible]? What has the Bulletin had to say about the men who were accused of [illegible] against public policy? Who has defended them. Judge Denny in his sojourning with crime. Not [illegible] a wish to see the [illegible] their victims brought to [illegible] from the first that [illegible] facie evidence of [illegible], it never called on the [illegible] courts of justice to ferret [illegible] punishment the guilty [illegible] tried in every way to [illegible] Attorney from arriving at [illegible]; it has sought to [illegible] to their advantage to [illegible], to the extent of its [illegible] aid and comfort to [illegible]. And, as if all this were [illegible] has relied upon the ignorance and superstition of this district to throw the "lowly" scoundrels [illegible]viction by the skirts of [illegible] tenderly to [illegible] the Bulletin has [illegible]ity in the corruptions [illegible] years, have made the [illegible] in this county a by-word [illegible] By its unqualified defense, and its commiseration with the accessories to [illegible], it has become [illegible]. From becoming the [illegible] of bigamy, adultery and seduction [illegible] life, it has come to be the [illegible] attorney for every scalawag [illegible] the city who will sell [illegible] a price. This, then, is the way [illegible] the Bulletin has "lashed" the [illegible] Attorney to the fulfillment of [illegible] duty. We confess to a higher [illegible] for the ignorant wretches who [illegible]ought, than for the mendacious [illegible] who would compromise with [illegible] for the [illegible]ce of a paltry salary.

[illegible], Pennsylvania, [illegible] land during the present year. The [illegible] in the murder of Walter Bradley, [illegible] a citizen's house on the night of [illegible]th, to return home. He was never [illegible] and as he was known to be [illegible] of a large sums of money [illegible] him it [illegible] that he was murdered. One day last week, a hunter found [illegible] within a rod of his house, [illegible] by some [illegible]. The top of his head [illegible] smashed in. Strange to say, all his [illegible], his bank book and other articles of [illegible] were found in his pockets. Of course, [illegible] detectives are at work.

[illegible] is yet another complication in Maryland politics. The Bourbon Democratic [illegible]ve Committee have issued an address [illegible]nouncing the action of the Democratic Convention in indorsing Senator Alcorn as a political intrigue. The address looks to that [illegible] in which the passions and prejudices engendered by civil strife having died out, the principles of Democracy will be enforced by an advanced civilization." If the precepts of Democracy are ever enforced, it will be by a [illegible]vil so "advanced" that it is useless to [illegible] their imaginative faculty by straining for it.

The gubernatorial contest in Virginia has taken on a new form. It is now said that Col Hughes, the Republican candidate, is disfranchised by reason of his having fought in a duel in 1840, and that he is therefore ineligible for the office of Governor. The report is contradicted, and in defense of Col. Hughes it is said that he was a kind of "involuntary second" It doesn't matter with his political opponents whether he be innocent or guilty. They will make their capital out of it, and the unfortunate Hughes must suffer for his "youthful indiscretion."

Colonel Burrell B. Taylor, who has for several months past occupied the editorial chair of the [illegible] announces in yesterday's [illegible] that he has sold all right [illegible] in the Mercury to Col. Wm. [illegible], his successor. Col. Taylor retires [illegible] His [illegible] is not [illegible] & Jones [illegible]

PERIODICALS FOR NOVEMBER.

Scribner's for November opens with Edward King's second paper on "The Great South" "Old and New Louisiana" is the subject of his article. It is embellished with numerous handsome sketches of life and architecture in the Creole State, and is, withal, a highly interesting contribution One of its pleasantest and most attractive features is the spicy tone in which the author discourses of March Gras—the grand carnival of the South "For Pastime" is the suggestive title of a love romance by Louise Chandler Moulton, in which the rude coquette meets with his deserving fate—desertion and unhappiness, while his victims are "happy in spite of him" "The Story of a Telescope" is a brief resume of the life trials and perplexities of one of our well known firms of telescope makers—Alvan Clark & Sons An elegant tribute of friendship to Edmund Clarence Stedman, the Poet-Broker, comes from the pen of A. R. Macdonough Two serial stories, "Katherine Earle" and "Earthern Pitchers"—the former by Adeline Trafton and the latter by Rebecca Harding Davis—are begun in this number "Annals of an English Abbey" is the title of a very handsome article by James Anthony Froude. Edmund Clarence Stedman contributes a review of the life and works of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, the Sappho of modern days Celia Thaxter has a dainty little poem on "November Morning." Other contributions in verse are "Alpenglow," by Margaret J. Preston, a Spiritual Song from Novale's, by Geo. Macdonald, and "An Arctic Quest," by H H. Dr. Holland takes the scalp of the New York Observer in a keen, trenchant defense of the publication of Blauvelt's remarkable series of articles on "Modern Skepticism" The Observer had said "Charles Scribner is dead. This sad fact is manifest not only by the vacant seat in his household, and by 'the aching void' in the hearts of his numerous friends, but it is painfully revealed by the course adopted by the magazine which bears his honored name. Many of its readers have been grieved by the travesties of religious experience which have appeared from time to time on its pages, and now it seems disposed to assume an attitude, of decided hostility to Christianity itself." From the editor's vigorous defense we clip at random:

It is a stupendous and most momentous fact, patent to all but the willfully blind, that there exists a modern school of skepticism in which critical scholarship and material science have united to unsettle the faith of the world in Christianity. The leaders of this movement have not been met and fully answered; and all who are in rapport with the public thought know that they have made a deep impression. To meet these men on their own ground, and defeat them there, are the aims of the papers that have appeared in this magazine—papers which are only preliminary to the grand work—a work from which no opposition is to frighten us, and no amount of vituperation can drive us. Our method is simply to substitute a non-partizan investigation for partizan controversy, and to establish by an appeal to the universal reason and heart that which not only does not stand by force of ecclesiastical authority, but which totters under its weight.

Incidentally, Dr. Holland remarks that Dr. Blauvelt confided to Mr. Scribner, before the death of the latter gentleman, his plan for the series of articles referred to, and the scheme received Mr. Scribner's "sympathy and warm encouragement."

If anything in the philological line has ever appeared, more entertaining and mirth-provoking than Richard Grant White's "Punishing a Pundit," it has not met our eye. As to the relative merits of the American and the English pronunciation of either, we quote:

Referring to what is said in "Words and their Uses" as to the best pronunciation of the words (either and neither), Dr. Hall lays down the law thus:

"On the contrary the analogy of cider, height and weight favors the pronunciations ither and nither; and so either and neither are, perhaps, most frequently sounded by cultivated Englishmen and Englishwomen. And in what sense are these pronunciations a 'British affectation?'"

This complex dijudication divideth itself into three contingent particulars; whereof the first argueth from analogy; the second declareth a usage; and the third, by way of interpellate interrogation, denieth that the pronunciation i-ther, n-ther is a British affectation. Now as to the first, it is the finest exhibition of what has been called brazen-facedness, then brass, then face, and then, by refinement and particularity of metaphor, cheek, that I, in the course of no small experience of that quality, ever confronted. For these three words cited as the ground of an argument from analogy for the pronunciation of ei, the first is a foreign word as much as sheik, or chamois, or voighan; and the second and third are anomalous exceptions, which have their pronunciation from their connection with high and sly. And these three words, thus in the very nature of things out of court, are, among the very many in our language containing the syllable ei, all that have the sound of long i. There is not one other. Dr. Hall, under these circumstances, having produced these three, we may from that maneuver judge with what degree of candor he deals To the direct contrary of this assertion there are but two analogical pronunciations of the ei in either, one ee, the common and regular sound, the other ay (name-sound of a.) There is besides, however, a colloquial abbreviation of these sounds. Of the first, like deceive, ceiling, etc., and of the second, like eight, freight, heir, obeisance, etc., examples will occur to every reader. Of the third are counterfeit, surfeit, foreign, leisure, etc. There being thus positively and absolutely no analogical support whatever in the English language for the pronunciation of either and neither with the i vowel sound, what shall be said other than what I have said of Dr. Hall's "bluffing" pretensions in that respect.

We wish we were able to give the second paper of Hon. Gideon Welles on "Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward," the extended notice it deserves We must, however, content ourselves with a hurried review and a single quotation. Mr Welles develops quite as much of the warm panegyrist as did the subject of his criticism—Charles Francis Adams We are told that Mr Seward was a Republican with centralizing tendencies, while Mr. Chase, then Secretary of the Treasury, was a Federal Republican with an unmistakable tenderness for State Rights Mr Seward assumed his portfolio with the impression that he was to be de facto President We are startled at finding Mr. Seward arraigned as a virtual advocate of peaceable secession But Mr Welles informs us that when Fort Pickens was endangered, Secretary Seward sent out, on his own responsibility and without consulting the Secretary of War, an expedition for the relief of that fort When the necessities of Fort Sumter were discussed in the Cabinet, General Scott and Mr Seward opposed sending supplies thither It was afterward alleged that Secretary Seward had promised the rebels that Sumter should be evacuated President Lincoln was wholly ignorant of this scheme It appears that as soon as the Administration had determined upon the relief of Fort Sumter, one Harvey who was afterward Minister to Portugal, and who was intimate at the State Department, telegraphed that intelligence to Charleston. And on the 6th of April, 1861, the day after the expedition sailed for Fort Pickens, Mr. Seward wrote to Judge Campbell a leading secessionist on the Supreme bench of South Carolina, "Faith as to Sumter kept Wait and see" Mr. Welles quotes from a private letter addressed to him by ex-Postmaster-General Blair, sustaining him in these charges. Other instances of the officiousness and the meddlesome disposition of Mr. Seward are given in the case of Commodore Barron, who was put in charge of a bureau in the Navy Department by our arbitrary Secretary.

Mr. Welles prevented the scheme, and he congratulates himself on it, in that Barron afterwards "deserted, and was the first naval officer captured in the rebel service"

Other articles are "Linley Rochford" a story by Justin McCarthy, "One Week an Editor," by Rebecca Harding Davis, a translation by C. P Cranch, of Victor Hugo's "Butterfly and Flower," "Women as Tacticians," by Junius Henri Browne, "An Old Story" by J W De Forest, and a tempting mass of choice miscellaneous reading matter

The American Law Review for October (Little, Brown & Co, Boston, A L Bancroft & Co, S F, Cal) contains three articles of lively interest The first of these—"An Elective Judiciary"—is a strong, compact argument for the appointment of Judges by the Executive of the State. The question is a live issue in several States, particularly in Ohio and New York, and this thoughtful article is a valuable contribution to current discussion. "The Law of Homicide" is ably discussed in a review of the opinion of the New York Court of Appeals in Stokes vs The People, 51 and 52 N Y The text of the argument is taken, properly, from the decision of the presiding Judge in the court below, who charged the jury as follows

The fact of the killing in this case being substantially conceded, it becomes the duty of the prisoner here to satisfy you that it was not murder, which the law would imply from the fact of killing under the circumstances, in the absence of explanation that it was manslaughter in the third degree, or homicide; because, as I have said, the fact of the killing being conceded, and the law implying motive from the circumstances of the case, the prosecutor's case is fully and entirely made out; and therefore you can have no reasonable doubt as to that, unless the prisoner shall give evidence sufficient to satisfy you that it was justifiable under the circumstances of the case. * * * Ordinarily, naturally, and properly in cases of this kind, juries are disposed and should give the prisoner the benefit of any reasonable doubt that may exist in the case, and I do not know that even this is an exception to that case If the evidence shall be doubtful on that subject, if you shall entertain reasonable doubts, if the evidence is evenly balanced so you do not know where the truth lies, the prisoner would be entitled to the benefit of that doubt.

The jury returned the verdict "Guilty of murder in the first degree," and to the first portion of the charge as given above, counsel for the prisoner excepted. The exception was sustained by the Court of Appeals. The review of the opinions given is an interesting summary of the common law authorities on the presumption of malice. The reviewer concludes that it is a legitimate, rebuttable presumption of law that certain acts (as in this instance, the taking of life) are prima facie unlawful, and import a criminal intent in the author. "In cases of murder," says our reviewer, "malice is the specific criminal intent, and hence malice is presumed to have attended the act. Moreover, this presumption is not inconsistent with the presumption of innocence, because the latter is a general presumption and applicable to the corpus delicti, as well as to the intent."

"The Distribution of the Geneva Award" is a rather "heavy" article on General Butler's hobby. In the "Summary of Events," the editor pronounces Attorney-General Williams' ruling in the Voght Extradition case, an "unanswerable argument."

We read that the delight of the Kiowas, on the restoration of their Chiefs, Santanta and Big Tree, was unbounded. The savages danced about the Commissioner and hugged Governor Davis repeatedly. It is not unreasonable to suppose that all this while the Governor, who appears to be "well up" in Indian character, was feeling for his revolver. In consideration of the leniency of Governor Davis, the Kiowas promise strict compliance with the terms of the release.

GRAIN ELEVATOR.—Three or four workmen are employed in finishing the new grain elevator on the O. S. N. Co.'s wharf. A few days' work and it will be completed. It consists of an endless chain, composed of strong wooden cross-pieces, securely bolted together with iron links. This chain moves up and down an inclined frame, reaching from the second story of the wharf to within a few yards of the water. At the top of the frame the chain passes around a large pulley, and also at the bottom. About every six feet an upright brace extends across the chain, which is firmly fastened to both the wood and iron. The whole arrangement is driven by a steam engine placed on the second story of the wharf. When the elevator is set in motion, two men stand on the boat and toss the sacks of grain on the movable platform. The braces spoken of hold the sacks in position and prevent them from rolling off. The speed can be regulated to suit the convenience of those who are handling the grain. By reversing the motion the wheat can be lowered as easily and rapidly as elevated. This elevator is a great convenience, obviating an immense amount of human labor, and saving both time and expense. It is estimated that, with the aid of the elevator, three tons of grain can be raised or lowered per minute. The vast amount of grain which must be placed on board the boats and discharged from them, has rendered the construction of an elevator an imperative necessity.

THE COMING MINES.—From a private letter shown to us last evening by a well known gentleman in this city, we learn that within the past two weeks placer diggings of remarkable richness have been discovered by prospectors on a branch of the Takima river, at the foot of Cascade Mountains. As high as $200 has been taken out by one man in a single day. Messrs. Geo. Goodwin and Pendy Flint, who brought the intelligence to the Dalles, took out nuggets weighing from $18 to $25. Parties have been mining in that vicinity for some time past, with excellent success. The diggings are only a short distance in the mountains, are easily accessible and the natural facilities are excellent. The last and richest discovery is distant four days' ride from The Dalles. We shall await further intelligence concerning these diggings with intense interest. We are hopeful they may prove quite as rich as the discoverers seem to believe them to be. Who knows but that we are to have another grand rush like the Cariboo and Salmon river exodus? And who shall estimate the benefits that would accrue to this community and to the State should the elated prospectors realize their golden visions? Parties leave this city to-day for the diggings. They seem to have great confidence in the information.

PASSENGERS.—The steamer John L. Stephens sailed at one o'clock yesterday with the following passengers: Mrs. Geo. W. Durbrow, Miss Mattie Troupe, Mrs. E. Norris, Mrs. J. R. Lawrence, W. O. McLeod, wife and 3 children, S. G. Allen, John Memain, H. C. McGee, Jose S. Cobo, Geo. Stevenson, Mrs. J. Wilson, M. G. McCarty, Henry Johnson, S. M. Smith, M. D. Ballard, Marsh Bilshaw, L. Fanuelt, Mr. W. J. Hill, Miss Mary Bedshaw, Philip Goldsmith, Wm. Riley, Geo. Haywood, L. Elwood, J. C. Patrick and boy, E. C. Brigham, L. C. Henrichsen, J. L. Storch, M. Lecampe, R. F. Read, H. Buden and wife, Dr. F. W. Schule, wife and child, John Root, W. G. Beck, Chas. Akey, J. H. Rathbuns, (Wells, Fargo & Co. m...ager) and 73 in steerage.

A SMALL FIRE.—Last evening at 11:30 o'clock the bells rang an alarm. The presence of the d...tructive element was discovered at the rear portion of the wooden building on Washington st..., adjoining Dekum's brick building. Evidently the fire had caught on the inside of the building, and when first discovered, was commencing to burn through the weather-boarding. Simultaneous with the alarm, several bucketsful of water were dashed on the incipient fire, which greatly checked its pro... until the arrival of the engines. It was the work of but a moment to extinguish all traces of the fire when the engines began to throw water. The loss to the building and to Mr. Ou...en will be slight.

NOT SO FAST, NEIGHBOR!—Our dispatches st... that a steam plow was received at San Fr... on Saturday from a large manufacturing ...blishment in Illinois. The fact is somewhat exultingly commented upon, as it is stated that the plow is the first which has yet been received on the Pacific coast. California does not lack any of the elements of enterprise, but she must not claim laurels at the expense of truth. Oregon is ahead of her big sister this time. By the arrival of the bark Vesta our enterprising fellow-townsman, Captain R. R. Thompson, received direct from Liverpool the first and largest steam plow which has yet been received on this co...t.

TEMPORARY DERRICK.—A temporary derrick has been erected on the deck of the English bark Vesta. It consists of two large pieces of timber more than a foot in diameter, and over forty feet long, powerfully lashed together with large ropes. This contrivance is for the purpose of hoisting from the hold of the vessel some ponderous portions of the steam plow belonging to Capt. R. R. Thompson. Several sections have already been raised to the wharf, and the remainder, including boiler, engine, plows, and the heavier tackling, will be discharged to-day.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—At a regular meeting of Morvin Grove No. 2, U. A. O. D., held at their hall Thursday evening, the following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing term: Peter Runey, N. A.; Rufus Norman, V. A.; A. G. Walling, R. S.; W. H. Ester, Treasurer; George Heaton, I. G.; A. B. Hallock, Trustee. Installation will take place next Thursday evening, at which time the appointed officers will also take their seats.

GERMAN SERVICES.—We call the attention of our German fellow citizens to the fact that the first of a series of German services will be held to-morrow evening at Trinity Church at 7½ o'clock, when the Rev. John Rosenberg will conduct the services. These ought to attract our German population, as many of them have not heard their service in their own beautiful language. Seats free.

A DRAINAGE SEWER.—A drainage sewer, leading from the new bank of British Columbia, at the corner of North Front and A streets, to the river, is being dug. Several men are now engaged in tunneling under Front street. The sewer is intended only to drain the one building. It is to be constructed of wood, and will be finished next week.

BODY RECOVERED.—Several weeks ago, an account was given in these columns of the drowning of a deck hand off the steamer John McNear, near Columbia City, and of the subsequent fruitless search after the body. A few days since the remains were discovered below Kalama, having been cast ashore. The body was given a decent burial.

INTO THE WATER.—The sections of large cast iron pipes have been added to the mouth of the Stark street sewer. This extends the sewer some distance out in the water, even at the lowest stages of water. Iron pipes were used, so that they could not be easily broken in the event that boats should land at that point.

RETURNS HIS THANKS.—We are requested by Prof. Stephen Doe to return, in his behalf, his sincere and heartfelt thanks to the kind citizens of this city and state who have befriended and patronized him. He started yesterday on the steamer for his home in San Francisco.

SAILED FOR PORTLAND.—The schooner Alice Hanke cleared at San Francisco for Portland on the 27th ult. The barkentine Wildcat and the brig Orient both sailed on the same day for this port.

MONTHLY MEETING.—The Board of Delegates of the Portland Fire Department will hold their regular monthly meeting at the Police Court room this evening.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

C. G. GLASS AND CHAS. MEALY BEFORE THE POLICE COURT ON A CHARGE OF MANSLAUGHTER.

According to expectation expressed by us yesterday morning, officer McCoy arrived here in the afternoon, having in charge Charles Mealy, who had been arrested at Albany. The preliminary examination of Glass and Mealey had been fixed for 6 o'clock in the evening. At that time the Police Court room was crowded by a throng of citizens, attesting the intensity of public interest in this, as yet, mysterious and sad case. The State was represented by George H. Durham, Esq., Prosecuting Attorney of this District, and H. Y. Thompson, Esq. The defendants were present in person, and by their attorneys, R. Williams, R. S. Strahan and O. P. Mason, Esqs.

The testimony on behalf of the State was taken, and was substantially as given below:

BENJAMIN HARDMAN

Was the first witness called for the prosecution. He testified as follows: I reside nine miles from Albany. Mary E. Hardman, the deceased is my sister; her age is 19. I was at home on the 6th of October; was also at home on Saturday the 25th; on the evening of that day I received a letter from Chas. Mealy, came to Albany early Sunday morning. [Mr. Thompson here produced the letter the witness alleged he had received from Mr. Mealy, and offered it in testimony.]

The letter was enclosed in a mourning envelope, and read as follows:

Mr. Benj. Hardman—Come, come quick, and come prepared for the worst. You must go to Portland to-morrow.

Yours in suffering and God help us all,

CHAS. MEALY.

The witness resumed: I came to Albany early on Sunday morning, where I met Mr. Mealy. He then told me for the first time that my sister was dead, and that I must come to Portland at once. In company with my brother Riley, who also came to Albany with me, I started for Portland. On arriving at the depot we hired a hack, and told the driver to take us at once to Dr. Glass' office. This he did. While I was in Albany Charles Mealy told me he was in Portland a short time before my sister died, and that she said, in a conversation with him (Mealy,) "God bless you, my friend." Mr. Mealy also said that Mary had died on Saturday morning at 2 o'clock, in Dr. Glass' office. He said to me that he had taken her to Portland some weeks before, and placed her under Dr. Glass for treatment. In the same conversation Mr. Mealey said that my sister had been unfortunate; that she had been seduced, and that his son George was the guilty party. On reaching Glass' office, I asked him if my sister had died at his office, and if he had possession of the body. He said yes. I then asked for the privilege of seeing the body. He said I could not see the body just then. Then I told Dr. Glass that affairs had been kept very dark, and that I did not fully understand how it was. To this he made no direct answer, but told me that he would call at the hotel at nine o'clock that evening, and then we (that is, Mr. Mealy, my brother Riley and myself) could see the body if we liked. At the hour appointed he called, but it was late and none of us went. Early on Monday morning we called at the undertakers, where we found Dr. Glass. He said he had everything in readiness; the body he had caused to be placed in a nice coffin, and that it was ready to be removed. I told him the body must be taken to Albany that day. Before we left with the remains for the depot, Dr. Glass said that he would give me a written statement, signed by himself and another physician whom he had called in for consultation, as to the causes which produced my sister's death. In the same connection Glass said that Mary had died of bilious intermittent fever. He has never yet sent me such a statement. I never saw the body of my sister until the coffin was opened in my father's house.

On cross-examination.—About three weeks before Mary's death I heard that Mr. Mealy had come to Portland with my sister, who was intending to go to the Sisters' school. A short time subsequent I learned that she had come to Portland to receive medical treatment. Before leaving home to go to Eugene City she had stated to her parents that she desired to come to Portland to attend school. I wrote a letter to her about two weeks after she arrived in this city, but never received an answer. After her death I obtained possession of the letter, it being given me by Dr. Glass; do not know now where that letter is; could not state the precise address of the letter—am inclined to believe it was directed "Mary E. Hardman, Dr. Glass' office." I saw Charles Mealy in Albany, and he told me where my sister was staying. He told me that she had been seduced, and that he had taken her there to receive treatment. He told me this a short time before I wrote to my sister. In the letter he said that he had something to tell me; that it was very, very bad; he scarcely knew how to communicate the fact to me; his son George was the guilty party—she had been taking medicine some time to produce an abortion—did not tell me that she had taken any medicine before she came to Portland. When she left home first, she told her parents she was going to Eugene City to her sister's, and expected to remain some time; Dr. Glass produced a bottle half full of some kind of medicine, and stated to me that she had been taking it (here the witness produced the phial, which was partially filled with liquid); Glass had stated that the phial contained the oil of tansy: that my sister obtained it at Eugene. I am not certain that Glass told me the reason I could not see the body of my sister was because it was at the Undertaker's; he told me that when Mary received my letter she cried bitterly, and felt very bad; I told him that I did not consider my letter was a harsh one, but was calculated to cheer my sister up; I do not know who defrayed her expenses while she was in Portland; I believe that I gave Mr. Mealy about $80 to send to my sister; sent it as a present, because I thought she needed it. Of that money which I had given Mr. Mealy, I received $40 back; it was handed me by Dr. Glass.

was next called, and testified as follows: I am a brother of Miss Hardman; last Sunday I came to Portland; came directly to Dr. Glass' office; we asked if we could see the body, and Dr. Glass said "Not now; that the body was then at the undertaker's; Dr Glass said that my sister had the bottle (before alluded to) when she came to his office; my brother said that her death had been kept very dark; Glass told my brother that he would give him a written statement concerning the causes that produced her death; have never yet received such a statement.

Cross-examined.—I heard that my sister had gone to Eugene City afterward that she came back to Albany, and then that she had gone to Portland to go to the Sisters school; did not know anything of her condition before she left home; Glass said that Mealy had brought her to his office for treatment, and was to pay him $250, at the rate of $15 per week for her board, for four or five weeks.

L. L. BACKUS

Testified as follows: I live in Albany, knew Mary Hardman from her childhood, saw her in Albany the evening before she started for Portland; she said that she was stopping at Mr. Mealy's, never saw her alive again.

Cross Examination.—I did not see anything wrong in her condition.

JUDSON CIRLE

Testified as follows: I live in Albany; have known Mary Hardman for the last three years; I saw her on the 5th of October, getting in the cars bound north; she was in company with Mr. Mealy at the time.

DR. RICE

Was next called and testified: Am a physician, have practiced for 20 years. I reside in Albany, knew Mary Hardman, conducted a post mortem examination of the remains last Monday. I found the heart, lungs, liver, spleen and bowels in a healthy condition, the uterus had recently been delivered of a fœtus about six months old; I should judge, a portion of the afterbirth I found remaining, the rest had been torn away, lower portion of the uterus had apparently been handled roughly, presented a bruised appearance. I think that hemorrhage produced her death incident to delivery. [Here Dr Rice examined the contents of the phial and pronounced it the oil of tansy.]

DR. HOLCOMBE

Testified as follows: I have lived in Albany a few weeks; have practiced for seventeen years; never saw Mary Hardman until the autopsy was held, in which I participated; found the stomach, heart, liver spleen, etc., in a healthy condition, the uterus had been considerably bruised and torn, presenting a bloody, mangled appearance. I think that that organ had been rudely handled and pulled about. I think she died from hemorrhage incident to delivery of a fœtus; the body looked shrunken and totally bloodless; there were no indications whatever that the patient had died from any kind of fever; she may have died suddenly from a great loss of blood, and again she may have lost it gradually and survived some time. I am of the opinion that the removal of the fœtus was premature, and that it produced hemorrhage resulting in death.

DR. HARRIS

Was the next witness called, and testified as follows: I reside in Albany, have practiced for two years, knew Mary Hardman since 1865; was present when the autopsy was held, closely examined the tongue and found it badly coated with a brown and yellow covering, found all the chest organs in an active and healthy condition; found the abdominal organs in a bad condition, the uterus presented a bruised and mangled appearance, had lately been delivered of a fœtus, a portion of which had, to all appearances, been torn rudely away, observed the large and somewhat distorted appearance of the uterus, think the fœtus which had been delivered was about six months old; am of the opinion that the direct cause of death was hemorrhage produced by a premature removal of a fœtus.

HORATIO COOKE

Testified as follows: I reside in Portland, am an undertaker; know Dr Glass, he called at my shop and asked for a coffin for a young woman, also a hearse. Dr Glass wished to bring a body to the shop after night; it was 1 o'clock on Saturday, found the body warm when I went to take the measure for the coffin, the body was brought over to the shop about 11 o'clock on Saturday evening and remained there until Monday morning at 6 o'clock.

Here the prosecution rested the case for the present, and the court adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock.

DALLES AND SANDY WAGON ROAD.

At the last session of the State Legislature a law was passed making an appropriation of the sum of $50,000 out of funds arising from the five per centum of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands lying within the State, not otherwise appropriated, and out of the fund arising from the proceeds of the sale of swamp, overflowed, tide and other lands, belonging to the State, not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a wagon road up the south bank of the Columbia river from near the mouth of Sandy, in Multnomah county, to the Dalles, in Wasco county.

The law designated as Commissioners Geo. W. Waldron and John M. Malden, of Wasco county, and David Monnastes, of Multnomah county, whose duties were to superintend the laying out and construction of the road. A competent surveyor was to be employed by the Board of Commissioners, who was to view, survey and mark out the most feasible route for the road.

According to the provisions of the Act, the Board selected as Superintendent of Construction, Mr. John M. Malden, and Mr. F. W. Slusher, Surveyor of Wasco county, as the person who was to make a survey and select the most practicable route for the proposed road. Mr. Slusher entered upon his work the 1st of September. All the preliminary surveys were made, and the route adopted by the 1st of the present month. Some time was requisite to enable the Surveyor to make out a map of the adopted route. This labor has just been finished, and the map and notes of survey were all filed in the Clerk's office of this county on last Thursday, in compliance with the law. The right of way calls for a piece of land 80 feet in width for the entire distance between the points. The road so constructed shall be considered, by the Act, as a county road for the distance it traverses the respective counties—Multnomah and Wasco—and shall be subject to the same alterations, control, etc., by the respective county authorities, as any other road situated within the county limits.

The law also provides that any person, company or corporation that may sustain damage by reason of the road are entitled to thirty days after the filing in the Clerk's office of the maps and notes of survey in which to give notice of such damage. Such notice filed within the time specified will be judicially examined by the County Court, the grounds of the complaint investigated and determined, and the damages, if the applicant is entitled to any, assessed. Any failure on the part of persons claiming damages to give notice within thirty days shall debar them from subsequent claims of damages, all rights in the premises being deemed waived. As the map has been filed it would be well for those who are likely to claim damages to give the required notification at once.

ARRIVAL OF VESSELS.

Three large sailing vessels have arrived at this port within the last thirty hours. Added to those already at the wharves, shipping now presents an animated appearance.

The British bark Santa Rosa arrived here about 11 o'clock yesterday in tow of the steamer Onwenta. The vessel crossed the bar last Tuesday, and sailed up the river as far as Oak Point, where the steamer hitched on. The Santa Rosa is under command of Captain Windermier. She came in ballast from Callao, and is under charter to carry a cargo of grain to Europe. For want of berth room at the wharf the Santa Rosa lies anchored in the stream.

The bark Dixon, Captain Allen, also arrived here yesterday morning in tow of the Doric Thompson. This vessel was built in Halifax in 1872. She is a wooden vessel of 733 tons registered capacity, is entirely new and has made but two voyages. She brought an assorted cargo to Buenos Ayres, and from thence came here in ballast. The vessel is under charter to carry hence a load of wheat.

At the same time with the Dixon arrived the bark Fiefshire, commanded by Capt. James Westwater. The Fiefshire was built in 1869 at Glasgow. She is constructed throughout of iron. Registered tapacity, 700 tons. This vessel has been engaged principally in the East India trafic. Two voyages were made to East India and one to San Francisco, the present being the fourth voyage the vessel has made since being launched. The Fiefshire came from Glasgow to Buenos Ayres with a cargo of railroad material and coal. Discharging her load, sand ballast was received and she sailed for this port on the 10th of August. Like the last two named vessels, the Fiefshire will take away a cargo of grain.

Have you inflammatory sore throat, stiff joints, or lameness from any cause whatever? Have you rheumatic or other pains in any part of the body? If so, use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, internally and externally.

Many persons suffer with sick headache and nervous headache, usually indicated by costiveness, indigestion, &c. Such persons will find relief if not cure, by keeping the bowels open with small doses of Parson's Purgative Pills.

"A Dose in Time," &c.

If "a stich in time saves nine," it is equally certain that a dose of a healthy tonic like Hostetter's Stomach Bitters taken at this inclement season of the year may save many an unpleasant twinge. A dose, however, is not sufficient. The system should be thoroughly charged with this genial vegetable stimulant and invigorant. Commence taking it with the commencement of the atmospheric changes which distinguish the winter from the autumn. Thereby you will avoid those disturbances of the digestive and secretive organs, and those painful diseases of the muscles and the nerves of sensation, which often render the period of the year which should be the merriest, a season of penance and disquietude. The extraordinary vigor and regularity which this exhilarating restorative imparts to the most important functions of the body render it an invaluable remedy for nervous debility, constipation, indigestion, torpidity of the liver, and intermittent fevers.

MARY AND I.

'Twas evening in May, and the soft zephyr sighed
Through branches low bending above
My Mary and I, as we wander'd along,
And whisper'd of beauty and love.
"We'll make us a nest like the birdlings," I said,
"And never shall part any more."
"Oh yes," she replied, "and can furnish it nice,
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE."

"Fair creature, there's many a wealthier man
Would gladly have you for a bride,
But no one can love you more fondly than I—
My treasure, my beauty, and pride."
Oh, had I a mansion, with carpets of gold
And silver, I'd cover the floor!"
But, smiling she said, "You can purchase the best
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE."

"I'll spread you a couch upon which to recline
When evening shall call us to rest
Of the fleecies down!—but," she said with a sigh,
"I like a hair mattress the best."
Then so it shall be; love and tables inlaid,
And seats from same beautiful shore."
"Oh no," she exclaimed, "They have elegant sets
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE."

"But Mary, alas, I must sadly confess
My means are but slender as yet
To furnish a house in the style you demand
Would hopelessly plunge me in debt—
To ask you to share my poor lodgings and board
Is something that I should deplore
She said with a smile "You can buy very cheap
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE."

To-morrow, then love, let us journey along
To the corner of Alder and First street—
To number 98 and 100 driver aside,
Where lovers so happily meet.
How many fond words might be severed for years
From those dears so fondly adore
We'll wait for the beautiful furniture they have
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE.

They have marble top bureaus and elegant sets
Of the finest furniture now
With center tables and hat posts and mirrors great,
And an endless variety of chairs not a few
They do cash business, and with money in hand
To purchase every style of furniture lover,
Are why they supply all the public demand
At HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE.

We went Mary and I and don't never forget
The pleasure that beamed in her face
As She viewed all the many fine sets beauty displayed
In HURGREN & SHINDLER'S place.
We furnished our home in an elegant style
Been married a twelve month or more,
And Mary—singing it so sweet to her Love
Of HURGREN & SHINDLER'S STORE.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 1, 1873.

JOHN'S PROMISE.

Sumner was a mushroom city which had sprung up on the banks of a ravine that cut through the western bluffs of the Missouri. In a thicket of oak saplings, high up on the side of one of those bluffs, stood a hastily-built house, aided with rough, upright, cottonwood boards—as are many of its western neighbors—a rusty stove-pipe sticking through the roof; a small window, curtained by a scalloped-edge newspaper, and white door taken from a sunken steamboat, whose newly-finished panels contrasted strangely with its surroundings, completing the exterior.

One pleasant May evening, just as the shrill whistle of a steamboat echoed among the hills this door was opened by a pleasant young woman, who was followed by a crying child.

"Oh, Sammy, quit your noise, that's pappy's little man; see the great big boat 'way yonder," lifting him up "don't you see? look at it sharp now, close agin' the bank. Does Sammy want to go down town and see the big boat, and see pappy?" The willing feet toddled down the path, but the mother called, "Wait a bit, and mammy 'll pack Sammy," and tying on a pink sunbonnet, she took him in her arms and started down the steep, crooked path.

It was a picturesque scene that lay before her. The sunlight, sifting through the trees that covered the western hills, glinted the windows here and there and reached, like a golden bar, just across the top of the forests on the low Illinois shore. It flattered through the hollow and up the side of the bluffs, were divers [illegible] from the pretentious Gothic dwelling on the northern hill and the brick business [illegible], to log cabins and cottonwood [illegible], while the road that wound up the [illegible] was lined with a long, white [illegible] of Denver-bound freight-wagons.

[illegible] reached the steep main street to find it [illegible] with wagons that had been turned cross-[illegible] of the street, to rest the teams. But edging her way close to the clay bank, she reached the river just as the steamer was leaving the [illegible]. The snorting of the engine and the [illegible] of the deck-hands, together with the [illegible] of the mill near by, was too much for [illegible] very, and Sammy's lips began to [illegible]. Catching him in her arms, his mother [illegible] on a near log, saying, "There, there, don't be afeared, be pappy's man, [illegible] waves of the receding boat sank [illegible] and lower on the sand; the gay crowd [illegible] over [illegible] the guards grew indistinct, [illegible] and more eagerly in [illegible] the tall cottonwood trees on the opposite [illegible]. At last four men came out of [illegible] and [illegible] ring a skiff, started across [illegible]. She [illegible] the skiff anxiously, for [illegible] between the waves [illegible] the strong south wind—[illegible] as proverbially to Kansas [illegible] ing-cough to children, or [illegible] ng men, in red woolen [illegible] did not pretend to wear [illegible] r—jumped [illegible] and with boisterous [illegible] jests, entered the mill. [illegible] spied her and came to-[illegible] boisterously, "Hoorah for [illegible] whatever brought you'uns [illegible] of creekin'? Mighty fine [illegible] you—ghter be to home gettin' [illegible] o' supper! Packed that [illegible], I'll bet! Reckon you'd [illegible] right quick, now!" He [illegible] her and tossed him on [illegible] ng. "Hoo ah for pappy's [illegible] this 'ere town! Mighty [illegible]" Poor Nancy! Her [illegible], pinning her deep [illegible] her face, that the [illegible] see the tears that would [illegible] so long that she had [illegible] her. She [illegible] on meeting [illegible]. How often she [illegible] long, lonely nights, [illegible] her child and her thoughts [illegible] minutes to get supper on [illegible] on the door-step [illegible] worrying all the [illegible] to Sammy. [illegible] of the liquor [illegible] he ate his supper and [illegible]. She could not [illegible] not let the tears [illegible] it would make him [illegible], laying her face on [illegible] in a while, to force [illegible] ding in her [illegible] to rock him asleep, [illegible] his father.

"I'm so proud"—she paused abruptly, her eyes dropped with a look of [illegible]. What mood was he in? [illegible] then? He had shoved [illegible], and there was a serious [illegible] in his eye—, but nothing sullen [illegible]. She went around, and dropping [illegible] but was him, slipped her arms [illegible], say to: "Oh, John, I wish [illegible] you'd never drink no more [illegible] too hard on a fellow; but I'll [illegible] not to—not drink too much as'in," he [illegible].

He kept his eyes steadily turned away [illegible] here.

"Don't you mind now," she went on, "how [illegible] me said one time, 'I reckon, Nancy, [illegible] John a mighty rough chap, but he's [illegible] at the core,' and don't you mind how [illegible] to pray for you in them old times? [illegible] you mind the evenin' we heard her [illegible] down by the old spring? If she's [illegible] you among the stars, how proud [illegible] I'd be to hear you promise. And John," [illegible] she continued, dropping her voice to a whisper, "I pray, too, sometimes. I haven't told [illegible], but I've been feeling right serious here of [illegible]. Ever since I've been to readin' my Bible, and I've [illegible] to up my mind to live better'n I used [illegible], and pray for you, too, and it seems like [illegible] God hears me." And she laid her head on his [illegible] to hide her tears.

His arms slipped around her, but he still kept his eyes turned stubbornly away from [illegible]. At last, laying his face against hers, he [illegible] earnestly, "Yes, Nancy, I promise."

[illegible]ddly starting up, he exclaimed, "if I [illegible] stayed till plum daylight!"

"Oh, John! come and kiss baby afore you go, he looks so sweet. Sammy! Sammy! [illegible] up, honey, and kiss pappy.

[illegible] his sleepy eyes! Pappy's little man! [illegible] I'll bring him some candy when I come home [illegible].

All day Nancy went about with such a light, [illegible] heart as she had not carried in her [illegible] for many a day; singing snatches of old [illegible] and thinking happy, hopeful thoughts [illegible] who, all the long hours, was working [illegible] the strong current of the [illegible].

[illegible] the [illegible] down brightly down [illegible] the [illegible] by the little window, and asked God's blessing on her husband and his good resolutions.

But she was awakened a few hours afterward, by a rush and confusion, a shower of glass and hail across her bed; and catching her baby in her arms, she sprang up, frightened and bewildered. It was a terrible storm, one long to be remembered by all who felt its terrors. The deafening roar of the wind and hail almost drowned the loud thunder claps. A blinding flash of lightning showed the trees almost bent to the ground, and the house rocked to and fro like a cradle. She suddenly felt a new, strange feeling, as if she was flying, floating, through the air. She thought she was dizzy, and caught hold of the bed. A terrible crash—she never knew how it all happened! Her baby's cries aroused her. The wind and rain chilled her through. She started to spring up but something held her down. A shock of pain darted over her, and putting out her hand, she felt a great beam lying heavily across her limbs. It seemed as though it was crushing her. Something struck her, then an other, and another. How they sang! Oh! was her child unsheltered from that pitiful storm? His screams grew louder. Oh! she must reach him! She could see nothing through the thick darkness, but she knew that he was not far off. What if he, too, was fastened, crippled! She stretched her arms, every movement made her pain more excruciating. She strained every nerve; she could almost reach him. What if he was free and could come to her? "Oh! Sammy! Sammy!" she cried, "come to mammy." The child ceased crying. She heard him move. His warm body touched her hands that were groping in the darkness. She caught him in her arms and hugged him to her breast. She felt of his head, his arms, his feet; sound and whole. How thankful she was for that. But how those cruel hail stones must have bruised him. She rested him on the ground and crouched over him, she could move just enough for that. The frightened child ceased crying, and put his arms about her neck. If she could only find something to cover them from the storm. She reached around, but could touch only cold mud.

Oh! that terrible pain! She had almost forgotten it in her anxiety for her child. It grew more and more intolerable. It seemed as though the hail-stones struck through into her brain. What if they killed her! Was she afraid to die? Visions of eternity, of the heaven of her faith, rose before her. Should she dwell with God and the angels forever? Was it possible that there would never be an end? No, she was not afraid of death. But her child, her husband—how could she leave them? Not yet! No, no, when life opened before her? She must live to help John keep his promise. God would spare her for that. How long it would be until morning. How could she bear the pain so long? Oh! it would be terrible if John should come and find her lying there, cold and stiff. John did love her, oh! so well. He had loved her so long. It seemed so many years since he first told her that he loved her; it was on the mountain-side, in dear old Tennessee. How far away it seemed. How the sun shone and the birds sang. How dreamy and bewildered her thoughts were. How still the baby was. Yes, she could feel his heart beat. She no longer felt the pelting of the storm; had it ceased?

Her thought was answered by a rush of wind from a new direction. She felt the great weight lifting off from her. She was free! Then—something struck her.

The train went snorting into Winthrop just at daylight. John jumped off, and was the first to reach the ferry. He had never seen Atchison so quiet. With the exception of those who had crossed on the ferry and a few early risers who were hurrying up the street, the town seemed asleep; but as he passed Commercial street, he saw a man who was riding a mule, coming down in great haste, who cried out, "How d'y, John?"

"Why, Jake?" he replied, "Is that you? I allowed you was half way to Denver afore now."

"We started yesterday, but we had a powerful storm on the prairie out here, last night. We chanced to be right near to a house and they let us in; but it sent our old wagons rolling over and over across the prairie, like a patch of tumble-weeds, and our oxen all stampeded; I'm on the hunt of 'em."

"If don't look like it had reached Atchison."

"No; I reckon it just took a streak."

John hurried on down the river. The road ran so near the bank that the steady swash of the water seemed under his feet. The birds were singing in the trees, and the sunshine came creeping down the bluffs overhead. How eager he was to get home that morning. His heart was full of new plans and new purposes. He could keep his promise, and he would; he would never make Nancy's heart ache again by breaking that promise. He stopped suddenly—had the storm reached Sumner? The tall buildings along the wharf were leaning roofless, one this way, another that; as if the wind, coming over the bluffs, had reached just low enough to uproot them. He hastened around the foot of the hill; there lay the brick hotel, the best in the town, in scattered fragments on the ground, like a wasp's nest scattered by the housekeeper's broom. He looked around; three-fourths of the town lay in ruins. How was it with his home? He ran up the street until he could see where it stood. Gone! Not a vestige of it left. And his family? Perhaps they had escaped before the storm; perhaps—. Scarce knowing what he did, he hurried to the nearest house that was yet standing, and without ceremony opened the door. There was no one in the room, but on a couch in one corner, a white sheet "sunk to the still proportions" of two silent forms. Moved by some strange impulse, he turned back the covering that shrouded the faces—Nancy and the baby! Shocked, stunned, he sank on his knees and laid his face on that dear form. Who can describe, who can comprehend the utter desolation of that hour? None but those who have felt it. Oh, the thoughts and memories that crowded upon him—many of them bitter, regretful thoughts. But there was one memory for which he was thankful: that he had not listened to the tempter which whispered to him yester-morn, that it would be weak and unmanly to yield to her request.

They found him there an hour afterward, but he asked no questions, made no reply to their attempts at consolation, and they left him alone with his dead.

There was "hurrying to and fro" in Sumner that day, for many were left homeless; many bruised and crippled by the storm. And the mourners who wended their way up the long hill to the burying-ground, were as sad as though the silence had been broken by the tolling of solemn bells.—Kansas Monthly.

The week now nearly closed has been marked by no specially important event in monetary or trade circles in our local market. As a class, the grain exporters are not so well furnished with funds to make purchases as would give the greatest amount of activity to the market, but still the capital is generally forthcoming when never lots can be secured on favorable terms. The usual rates of discount are firmly maintained by our city banks, though street loans, it is claimed, are effected with increasing ease. There is doubtless a healthier condition of trade now existing than we enjoyed at the corresponding period or during the latter part of autumn and early winter last year. The receipts of funds here from outside sources since the first of August have been at least $600,000—a much larger sum than is usual for the same length of time, and one which has very materially conduced to a tolerably easy condition of our local finances. The greater portion of the money thus received together with a large amount of home capital, aggregating at least $1,000,000, has gone into the hands of the producing classes who, as a rule, have enjoyed the most profitable year in the history of Oregon. With these circumstances in our favor, and the lapse of the financial storm lately raging in the East a prosperously active market of demand for all our products at remunerative if not high prices there is no ground to fear anything—an actual monetary scarcity or a serious embarrassment of our commerce during the winter months. The winter season, which locks up many channels of communication and transportation in the Eastern States, but opens those channels more generally on this coast and thus merchants and others do not expect that activity at this time here, which would be anticipated, if in a few weeks the ice king were expected to close our rivers and bring commercial affairs to a partial and temporary stand still. The trade usually supplied from this market is never shut out from receiving supplies by the frosts of winter, and therefore interior merchants do not throng our marts in the fall months to secure their winter's stocks; they can be replenished at any time.

The latest intelligence received from Eastern markets is that large remittances of Gold amounting to twelve millions of dollars, have been forwarded to New York from England, and, to check the flow, the Bank of England has raised its minimum to 7 per cent. Our purchases of English commodities have declined materially, whereas the United Kingdom has been a very liberal buyer of our breadstuffs cotton, tobacco and meats. United States bonds being a better investment than Gold, the latter is sent here in payment for our domestic products.
